Neri Rivas, right, passes out certificates Tuesday after they completed a computer literacy class at Van Wig Elementary School in La Puente. The class was part of the One Million New Internet Users in 2011 initiative.

In a small ceremony held Tuesday afternoon, 22 parents of Bassett Unified students celebrated an academic achievement of their own — graduating from a class that introduced them to the online world.

The parents took the class as part of California's One Million New Internet Users in 2011 initiative, which seeks to help parents become proficient in computer use.

The idea is that if parents know how to use computers and the Internet, they'll be better prepared to help their children through school.

"This is our chance to reduce the dropout rate," said Larry Ortega, founder and CEO of Community Union, the group sponsoring the program.

The parents gathered in the gymnasium of Van Wig Elementary, near La Puente, with their children to be congratulated for their achievements.

Bassett Unified Superintendent Marty Galindo and school board

President Laura Santos both stressed the important role technology plays in education while addressing the parents.

"In our district, technology is changing every day, and we want the parents to be part of it," Santos said.
